

South Platte River, Colorado

Bears Ears National Monument, Utah

Río Grande del Norte National Monument, New Mexico

BLM lands, Wyoming

Protect the land and you protect everything that comes with it.

Public lands from sagebrush country to national monuments give us clean water, abundant wildlife and incredible opportunities outdoors. Secretary Zinke, as a fellow sportsman you know the power of these places. They define our heritage, strengthen family bonds and fill our freezers. Our public lands also provide important natural resources. But Interior's energy dominance strategy threatens that balance, putting short-term profits ahead of everything else, including the everyday hunter and angler. Let's make conservation a priority—it's the only way to maintain our way of life in the West.

